The Mizzou Office of Graduate Studies is dedicated to providing the intellectual stimulation that comes from a diverse campus community, which ultimately contributes to a higher level of informed academic inquiry at the University and beyond.

In keeping with these aims, we have established the Center for Inclusive Excellence, which houses initiatives designed to enhance graduate diversity and inclusion at Mizzou. One such effort is our campus visitation program, TigerView. We invite prospective graduate students with an interest in pursuing a graduate degree at Mizzou to apply to participate in TigerView, held October 7-10, 2018.

- Learn about the opportunities for research and academic growth available to students at Mizzou, a leading research university
- Network with current faculty, graduate students, administrators, and contacts in your program of interest
- Collect information about the admissions process and funding opportunities
- Participate in presentations, lab tours, workshops on essential graduate school components, and social activities

Who Are We Looking For?
- U.S. citizens or permanent residents
- Students of racial or ethnic groups that are underrepresented in graduate education (Black/African American, American Indian, Alaskan Native, Hispanic/Latino, or Native Pacific Islander) and/or students who participated in a Ronald E. McNair Post-Baccalaureate Achievement Program or Student Support Services Program are strongly encouraged to apply
- Students who have a genuine interest in research and plan to enter a graduate program the Fall of 2019
- Strong academic record
- Interest in one of Mizzou’s graduate programs, which can be found here: [https://gradstudies.missouri.edu/degree-programs/]
