Greetings from the Department Chair

Greetings! Just prior to writing this note for our newsletter, I completed the WGS Department’s Annual Assessment (you can find this report on our website). Our assessment report reveals that while there are improvements in the works, the major is growing – we now have over sixty majors – and WGS students are very satisfied with their education. In the process of writing our assessment, I re-read our students’ Intellectual Biographies, the final paper assigned in WGS 485: Senior Seminar (2006), and I was struck by how articulately and passionately students described the major. I was also struck by how enthusiastic they seemed at the end of their academic career – a time when students are more likely to be burnt out and eager to move on. So, instead of summarizing the report, I thought I’d let our students tell you about what they’re learning, what they’ve experienced, and how they’ll apply their education in the “real world”.

Nan Alamilla Boyd, Chair, Women’s and Gender Studies

What is WGS???

“Women’s and Gender Studies is an interdisciplinary field that seeks to understand and delineate women’s experiences within a societal framework, as well as to understand how all people experience gender in our society.”

“Women’s and Gender Studies... covers a vast array of subject matter, all of which forces us to analyze our individual thoughts and feelings and to question: What is authentic? What is the truth? Is there only one truth? Who decides what the truth is and what gives them the power to be in that position?”

“Unlike my initial assumptions, Women’s and Gender Studies is not only about feminism or learning more about women, but it is rather a provocative academic discipline that is aimed towards the liberation of everyone.”

“WGS examines and questions any kind of human belief system, which includes feminism, from a gender perspective... WGS is a discipline that questions and challenges many power dynamics in order to deconstruct the modern models of social oppressive systems.”

“The Women’s and Gender Studies department combines many different disciplines into one... As I was explaining to a potential employer during an interview, my major encompasses sociology, history, current event, and politics to bring understanding to issues facing everybody in the ‘real world’.”

(cont’d on p. 8)
As always, WGS students are making a difference in both on-campus and off-campus communities while gaining valuable experience for the future. Check out the diverse sites and get some ideas for your own internships!

Marie Akatani has an archival internship with the GLBT Historical Society of San Francisco.

Megan Arrighi, Kate Kellett and Laura Martínez are earning their internship units as Crisis Line Counselors for United Against Sexual Assault (UASA).

Kelly Cambell and Sophie Jelen are both working for United Against Sexual Assault (UASA) as Prevention Educators. Sophie is also earning her internship units at Planned Parenthood in Rohnert Park.

Jamie Escat and Heather Ferrero are working with children at Kinder Care Learning Center.

Erica Klescewski is interning at the Sonoma County Department of Human Services Information and Referral, involved in client assessment and referrals. She also volunteers at Friends Outside at the Sonoma County jail providing services for inmates and their families. And finally, Erika is a Crisis Line Coordinator at United Against Sexual Assault.

Lianna Hart is interning with Easter Seals this semester. She is also continuing her research study, begun in WGS 425 last semester, on children with autism.

Crystal Llopis is interning this semester with the Hannah Boys Treatment Center, working with boys aged 14-18.

Jessaca Machada, Hilary Moore and Laura Nichols are all interning this semester with Circle of Sisters (COS), a community organization serving girls aged 10-14 in Sonoma County. Hilary is also completing her internship units as an intern with the California Safe Schools Coalition. Laura also has a second internship with the Living Room, a daytime drop-in program working with homeless and at-risk women and children in Santa Rosa.

Shelby Means, Nicole Vaticano and Joy Young are working as interns with Family Connection, an organization that assists homeless families in transition. Shelby is also interning at Planned Parenthood, where she works as a Health Educator.

Danielle Moreno is interning this semester with the Sonoma County Public Health Department as the Teen Health Advocate Intern. She is also earning internship units as the WGS Newsletter Editorial Assistant.

Diana Thomas is interning with Women’s Health Specialists in Santa Rosa.

Heather Pankiw is working with teens this semester at VOICES Emancipation Center. She, along with Danielle Moreno, is a Teaching Assistant for the Women’s Health Lecture Series this semester.

WGS Student Point Of View

Feminist Poststructuralist Theory in Action
by Lianna Hart

I have been working within the community on issues of disability for several years through classes, research, and internships. I try to apply what I have been learning in WGS classes to my work in order to better understand concepts and to make my work more meaningful. In this essay, I am going to attempt to connect my WGS internship to poststructuralist concepts recently discussed in WGS 475: Feminist Theory. While poststructuralism is too complex to detail in this short article, two major aspects of the theory include the importance of language in shaping subjectivity and the questioning of categories (e.g. gender, race, sexuality, disability, etc.). Feminist poststructuralism can help us see the connection between how we talk about something (discourse) and how we understand the world. I've begun to look for everyday examples of feminist poststructuralism in action and I believe I found an example in my internship work at Easter Seals.

Easter Seals is an organization assisting individuals with disabilities. Updating their resource library has given me a historical view of the changes in the discourse on disability since the 1970s. In the past, disability has primarily been discussed in ways that emphasize the disability over the individual. Although it is still common to hear individuals described by their disability as disabled or autistic, many within the disability community insist on “people-first” language. Accordingly, rather than disabled or autistic, people are described as individuals with disabilities or children with autism. This attempt to change perceptions of disability through changing the structure of language is an example of poststructuralist theory at work.

My internship experiences have provided me an opportunity to apply feminist poststructuralist theory to everyday life, helping me to make the connection between theory and practice. Through working with issues of disability with Easter Seals and elsewhere, I have noticed how language shapes my views. I have chosen to use people-first language when I talk about individuals with disabilities; I believe this discourse is more favorable for individuals with disabilities since it emphasizes their personhood, a characteristic they have historically been denied. People with disabilities are much more than their disability and it seems that reshaping the discourses on disability has the potential to re-conceptualize differences and fuel social change. In poststructuralist terms, since ideology is embedded within language, changing language changes how people think about disability, which, in turn, changes how people with disabilities are treated in society.

Women’s Health Lecture Series

This fall, the Women’s Health Lecture Series presented a wide range of eye-opening lectures focusing on topics in the area of women’s health. This semester’s lecture series was put together by Instructor Jocelyn Hall Arild, and her two teaching assistants, WGS majors Danielle Moreno and Heather Pankiw. The first lecture of the semester was given by Jeanette Koshar, RN, NP, Ph.D. of the SSU Nursing Department. Professor Koshar opened up the series by speaking about women’s health care over the past fifty years in the United States. Following her lecture, Professor Barbara Bloom of the Criminology and Criminal Justice Department gave a lecture on the mental and physical health of incarcerated women. Other lecture topics early in the semester included abortion, women and stroke, intuitive eating, ethical dilemmas surrounding the care of dying newborns, and choices in childbirth. Mid-semester, the lecture series welcomed author and personal historian Linda Blachman. Ms. Blachman wrote the book Another Morning, which documents the experiences of mothers living with cancer and their struggle to parent their children through illness.

Toward the end of the semester, topics included sexually transmitted diseases, women and aging, human trafficking, doulas and teens, depression, and the benefits of massage. Teaching assistant Danielle Moreno gave a lecture on the benefits of doula support on teenage mothers. Dr. Amanda Noble came from the State Attorney General’s office to speak on human trafficking and how women and children are affected. Erin Beeman, CMT from the SSU Massage Center, will wrap up the semester with her presentation on women and the health benefits of massage.

As always, all lectures series each semester are open to the public! Feel free to drop in! Next semester will be the Queer Lecture Series organized by Professor Nan Alamilla Boyd. For a complete listing of the speakers for any WGS lecture series, see the WGS website at www.sonoma.edu/womenstudies.

WGS Welcomes Bonnie Sugiyama

This summer, the Women’s Resource Center and the Intercultural Center joined forces as they merged to become the new Center for Culture, Gender, and Sexuality (CCGS). With the creation of this new facility also came a new face to campus. Bonnie Sugiyama, has been hired as the interim CCGS Coordinator. She arrived in July and has taken on the enormous task of opening up and running the new center. She comes to us from Sacramento State University where she worked for their Women’s Center and also where she earned both her undergraduate and graduate degrees. The WGS Department looks forward to a positive working relationship with Bonnie and the CCGS, including programming for the upcoming Women’s History Month in March 2007.

The CCGS offers a variety of services for students on campus and is the meeting place for many organizations on campus including the Women’s Student Union, Black Student Union (BSU), Filipino American Association of Sonoma State University (FAASU), Asian Pacific Islander Organization (APIO) and the Bisexual, Intersex, Gay, Lesbian Association of Sonoma State, Queer Transgender and Straight Supporters (BI-GLASS QTS) to name a few. Stop by and check it out! Also check out the center’s website at www.sonoma.edu/ccgs as well as www.myspace.com/ssuccgs. And of course, do drop in at the Center (1st floor of the Student Center), welcome Bonnie, and see what’s going on!

Getting Up Close and Personal with History

Ever been curious to read how women talked about slavery or suffrage or settlement houses in letters to their friends? How did newspapers first report the Stonewall Riots or Roe v. Wade? How did the pamphlets produced by the Guerilla Girls describe their efforts to gain recognition for women artists in the 1970s? How did Ida B. Wells-Barnett or Frances Watkins Harper draw crowds with their speeches during the anti-lynching movement of the early 20th century?

How did the language used in newspapers at the time of the Japanese American internment or the Holocaust influence how readers felt about the people involved? What insights can be drawn about Chicsaw culture from the writings of and interviews with Linda Hogan? How have the founders of the disability rights movement described the importance of community? Who are the Chicana feminists who might not have much written about them? How did women describe their first encounters with the giant redwoods in California in the 1850s?

These questions, and many more, can be answered through the use of primary sources available at the University Library. Primary sources (e.g. letters, diaries, interviews, plays, newspapers, photographs, speeches, and pamphlets) are first-hand accounts that can help history come alive! They allow you an up-close and personal account of the topic of study.

The library has a wonderful collection of primary source materials—much of which is available online! Current students, faculty, and staff can access these resources online using their Library PIN and barcode; others can come to the library to access the resources.

Stop by the Reference Desk on the second floor if you have questions about how to find or use these primary source materials. Or, give me a call: Paula Hammett, (707) 664-3912 or paula.hammett@sonoma.edu.

What is it like being a WGS major??

“I don’t think I can put into words how much I have loved and appreciated my Women’s and Gender Studies education…I have found myself through WGS and have seen myself grow in my other disciplines because of it. I have found my calling and my muse.”

“WGS is an excellent field because the variety of understudied issues that it offers are more valuable than the degree earned. It is a tool for the rest of my educational life.”

“Women’s and Gender Studies gives people a chance to expand their mind, to challenge what they think they might know, and to give a sense of compassion for others.”

WGS majors are inspired to change the world!!!

“As a whole, Women’s and Gender Studies has made it possible for me to think on my own, to think for myself and make my own conclusions…all this has helped me to see the world through a wider lens. I feel empowered; I feel educated; I feel inspired; I am ready to take educated action.”

“One day I know that this experience will help me to become a great educator on the issues of sex and gender and hopefully I will be able to make a difference, even if it is just a small one, by sharing what I have learned as a Women’s and Gender Studies major.”
Greetings our esteemed Alumni! WGS misses you and wants to hear what you’re up to! First, to our two most recent graduating classes, we sent out an Alumni Survey to you via regular mail. If you did not receive it, or have not filled it out yet, please take some time to do so. Your input is very much appreciated. And secondly, to ALL our alumni, we will soon have an Alumni Survey up on the WGS department website. Please take a minute to take it at your earliest convenience. You can also sign up for the Alumni Listserv there as well.

http://www.sonoma.edu/womenstudies/alumni-info.htm

You are also invited to e-mail any of us faculty directly (mail/what you’re up to). We love to hear from you.

Oh Alumni....Where are you?

“In order to work together as the human race we must first recognize what separates us, knowing that each of us will have different viewpoints and experiences depending on one’s gender, race, class, sexuality, religion, and ability, yet embracing our differences will allow us to make strides towards justice and equality together.”
